YOU NEED A LTWR INTERN!

Literature and Writing Studies (LTWR) Interns receive academic credit for 3-9 hours of work per week in your company or agency. By providing a student with “real world” experience and a chance to “try out” a career before graduating, you get a motivated and articulate intern for a semester. Internships need not be paid—in fact we prefer them unpaid so that we can offer academic credit instead.

LTWR INTERNSHIPS ARE EASY:

- We do the paperwork, advertise the position, and screen candidates.
- We monitor student progress throughout the semester and require the intern to keep a formal journal (or write a longer paper) tracking their experience.
- We hold in-person “progress checks” with the intern regularly throughout the semester.
- We are available to step-in should any problems arise in the course of the internship.
- We list your company/agency as a “friend of LTWR” on our internship page of our website.

LTWR INTERNS ARE THE BEST:

- Our interns have more experience as writers, since every class they take at CSUSM requires extensive formal writing—even math and science courses!
- Our interns can read critically, arrange arguments logically, and use rhetoric effectively—that is what they study every day in LTWR!
- Our interns have a strong work ethic and prior experience in the workplace, as most CSUSM students also work over 20 hours per week or have families to care for. Many are first-generation college students and have made real sacrifices to pursue their degree.
- Our interns have plenty of experience working in teams and on collaborative projects.
- Our interns are comfortable with technology and familiar with web-based tools, since CSUSM students must meet computer competency requirements and use technology in all of their classes. Many students also have web design and web development skills.
